

This book is the 6th in a series of books on the life of birds in America. Howard the Owl teaches the birds all about their nests, babies, eggs, feathers, food and everything they need to know. In this book he teaches them about their babies'™ first flight, which can be very scary. When the young birds start to fly, they may not reach the nearest tree they aimed for and may land on the ground, where all sorts of enemies might get hold of them. Howard gives the parents all sorts of advice on how to act in such dangerous situations. This will be enjoyed by young and old.
