

Charles Lucky Luciano was a New York vice lord who began his career in crime at age 9. Luciano received a significant setback in his career when he was successfully prosecuted for compulsory prostitution by future New York City D.A. and New York Governor Thomas Dewey. Then just nine years later Luciano was pardoned or had his sentence commuted by the same man, Thomas Dewey. The New York governor said at various times that he relied on the parole boards decision to commute Lucianos sentence, which was slated to run 25-30 years. Nevertheless Dewey always had to answer questions about his Luciano commutation from rival politicians, especially when he ran for reelection. My book is compiled from newspaper clippings that I have researched in New York papers, from the mid 1930s until the 1960s. Lucky Lucianos final days in Naples, Italy are included as well as his sudden death and elaborate funeral.
