

1309~Scottish Borders Abducted and held prisoner by a band of well-armed strangers, Lady Elisabeth Redmond is in grave need of rescuing. A mysterious knight appears from the shadows to help her and while she's grateful, she's not certain what to think of him. She later witnesses him singlehandedly killing several men bent on recapturing her and realizes she's entrusted her life to a very dangerous man. Once in the service of Frances King Phillip, following his conscience has doomed Eric Jordanne to life as an outlaw. The bastard son of a seamstress, all he wants is to escape his past and start his life anew in Scotland. Sadly, it seems that wish won't be granted. Cast in the role of hero by the Redmond clan, he's drawn into the midst of their war against the English for the very existence of Scotland. When he's hired to be Elisabeth's protector, Eric quickly learns that his troubles have only started. As their attraction deepens into a passion neither of them can ignore, he becomes far more than her defender. Though such a liaison is forbidden, their love for one another takes them to the brink of having everything they've ever wanted. And then a cold-blooded betrayal rips them apart, leaving Elisabeth at the mercy of a madman. Will treachery defeat them, or will their love prove strong enough to overcome fate itself?
