

Death of a Man - Clarissa Burden Death of a Man tells the true story of the long and debilitating illness of Daniel Perryman, partly in the form of a diary kept by his wife, Vinny, and partly in narrative. The story chronicles the slow decline of a proud man from the first intimations of his illness to his eventual capitulation to it. Such an opening sounds like a gloomy and depressing read, but not so. The story is enlivened by humour and by an admirably pragmatic approach to misfortune, as well as by the love that flows between the couple and that, despite everything, does not fail them. Although the diary does sometimes tell of Vinny's despair and her battles against the adversity of the situation in which they find themselves, the mood is upbeat and the theme is sympathetic.
