

At the height of the Korean War Ensign Mike Kinkaid must leave his new bride when Navy orders revoke promised flight training and send him to a ship to confront the legacy of his father's World War II tragedy. A revenge-seeking senior officer's vendetta challenges Mike in a series of life-threatening incidents -- dodging floating mines -- an arctic night rescue -- a downed pilot recovery under enemy fire. Mystery, intrigue and a contentious investigation threaten Mike's dream to fly for the Navy. Endorsements on cover: "Jack Russ's yarn set during the Korean War is a classic story of a new naval officer at sea with all its complications of machinery, operational events and personalities. Having experienced that myself aboard an aircraft carrier in 1952 I can imagine what it was like aboard a destroyer escort." -- Captain John F. O'Connell, USN (Ret), Author of Submarine Operational Effectiveness in the 20th Century, Part One (1900-1939) "As a former destroyer captain and young officer on a destroyer escort at the time, the story brings back vivid memories that tells it like it was. His portrayal of key personalities and shipboard life of officers and crew is exceptional." -- Captain L. I. Moore, USN (Ret.)
