

Color photography documenting daily life of the world-famous seal colony at Casa Beach in La Jolla, north of San Diego, California, where, in recent years, about 200 harbor seals have reclaimed a once-natural haul out site. Here, in close view of spectators from the adjacent cliffs and sea wall, they rest after deep dives, give birth, and rear their pups, oblivious to a several-year legal saga waged to force their eviction from the beach. A Hollywood-worthy drama played out in July, 2009 until a judge's 72-hour dispersal order was thwarted by a California State Legislature bill, signed, at the last minute, by Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger, giving San Diego authority to decide the fate of the beach and the seals. Hopefully, the final outcome will provide permanent refuge as a marine mammal reserve.
