

Excerpt from Rhode Island Historical Society Collections, Vol. 26 At the southern tip of the island of Rhode Island lies Newport, of which it has been said, The climate is the most salubrious of any part of his Majesty's possessions in America ... It is made the resort every summer of numerous wealthy inhabitants of the Southern Colonies, and the West Indies, seeking health and pleasure. For the same reasons, and to enjoy the refined and polished Society of Newport, many families of fortune from the West Indies and Europe have taken up their permanent residence there; and among them many men of science and education have ... made it their abode ... There are upwards of nine thousand inhabitants, celebrated for their hospitality to strangers, and extremely genteel and courtly in their manners.
