

This is the first of a series of little books aiming to help parents of teenagers, youth workers, teachers and associated professionals/ family members to better understand how to support young adults to develop fundamental interpersonal skills for life and the self- confidence to make positive choices for themselves. This book is therefore not about controlling or analysing teenage behaviour. The focus is keeping young people engaged with the family and wider society during a period when many teenagers feel alienated, confused, and uncertain of their future role. To stay alongside our teenagers, we need to be realistic in our expectations, review our own behaviour, challenge some social attitudes, set reasonable clear boundaries and doggedly convey that we love and value them and know they love us. The style is direct, challenging, practical and humorous, the language is friendly conversational English.
