

I have seen near miracles occur from the healing power of love. I have witnessed depressions lift and anxieties ease. I have seen joy blossom and loneliness disappear. I have heard some claim, without apology or shame, that love has rescued them from the clutches of death itself. I have had patients tell me with a fair amount of frequency that without love, life has no meaning and is not worth living. And yet, for every story of love's magic, I have heard a counter-balancing story of love's destructiveness- tales of agony and loss. I have heard of rage and vindictiveness set in motion from perceived betrayal. I've heard of rejection and loss that causes a heart pain that is as scorching as a surgical incision without anesthesia. I've heard of neglect and abuse by parents whose emotional maturity is sufficient for playing with the toys of childhood but certainly not adequate for the complex demands of adult loving. Considering how strong our need for love is, and how powerful a healing force love can be, it is astonishing that we bungle it as often and in as many ways as we do. (back cover)
