

Excerpt from The Princeton University Bulletin, Vol. 9: A Quarterly Record Edited by the President and Members of the Faculty This phylogeny of many hoofed animals, such as the horses, rhinoceroses, camels, &c., has been satisfactorily determined by means of the numerous and beautifully preserved fossils which have been found in the ancient lacustrine deposits of the West. To work out the descent and mutual relationships of the various families of Carnivora is much more difficult task, in which hardly a beginning has been made. The principal difficulty lies in the comparative rarity of the Carnivora as fossils and in the still greater rarity of reasonably complete specimens of them. Many genera, which were named half a century ago, are still very inadequately known, and the materials for a more complete knowledge of them accumulate very slowly as compared with the wealth of the hoofed mammals. In the season of 1896, Mr. J. W. Gidley had the good fortune to collect quite an extensive series of the primitive and highly interesting White River dogs, material which throws much welcome light upon the origin of the Canid? and their relationship to the other carnivorous families.
